How will China's solar photovoltaic market change after a double-reverse?

Finally, China's solar photovoltaic sector, a global leader with strong manufacturing capacity, advanced technology, and cost advantages, will seek new markets after encountering the double-reverse, and exports will be deflected towards these countries with large PV power generation and strong demand in the PV market.

Will China's photovoltaic industry encounter adcv in Europe and the US?

Therefore, Driven by a range of factor, such as the increase of geopolitical risks in the world, the rise of trade protectionism in China, and the attempts of various countries to build their renewable energy industry chain, the risk of China's photovoltaic industry encountering ADCV in Europe and the US will always exist.

Does adcv affect China's solar energy industry?

Globally, China's solar energy industry has been heavily targeted by ADCV implemented by several countries due to its rapid development and significant market share (Lee et al., 2017; Sandkamp, 2020). These investigations have profoundly impacted CSPE. Table 1 gives the specific details of countries' ADCV against Chinese PV.

How does trade deflection affect Chinese PV exports?

First, regarding the trade deflection mechanism, market demand in destination countries plays a central role in determining where Chinese PV exports are redirected. According to the heterogeneous firm trade theory, export flows are more likely to be diverted toward countries with substantial and growing market potential (Helpman et al., 2008).
