

London shopping mall uses 200kWh foldable shipping container

Overview

conceived by london based roger wade, ' boxpark ' is a temporary shopping center located within the shoreditch district in london, england. british practice waugh thistleton architects designed this premier 'pop-up mall' constructed of shipping containers and positioned the structure within the former railway goodsyard. the architectural concept allows it to be adapted to other underutilized properties when this site is ready for future permanent development. this gives the area a renewed, short term purpose as an impromptu node for shopping and gathering while adding a fresh energy the urban context.
